and assume the reigns of government. This seems like a cold blooded way of viewing the aspect, but that makes it none the less true. If Trilden is nominated the next best man for the place nated the next best man for the place should be put with him, because he might be needed. The vice-president should always be perfectly qualified to fill the presidency, as bitter experience has generally shown in the past. Col. W. R. Morrison would be a splendid man for the first place if he could get it, which is yet very doubtful. But what a team Tilden and Morrison would make. Why not?

The bill of Representative Stewart of Texas providing for the appointment of two commissioners to investigate the feasibility of constructing a railroad to connect the United States with the countries of South America is a the countries of South America is a little startling in the vastness of the undertaking which if contemplates. A railroad more than 6,000 miles long! Direct all-rail communication between Direct all-rail communication between America and the Argentine republic! It sounds like a fairy tale. It is almost necessary for one to pinch himself to be sare that he is not asleep and dreaming about some of Jules Verne's wild conceptions. The undertaking of such a railroad would be an immense one, of course, but it would scarcely equal in magnitude now or at least would not excel the hugeness of the building of the first transcontinental railway. We have grown immensely, and what once seemed great undertakings could now be carried forward without any great effort. The benefits that would accrue to this nation from a direct connection with the great continent to the accrue to this nation from a direct con-nection with the great continent to the South are manifold. We could have almost exclusive control over the trade of the South American countries, and of the South American countries, and those countries in return would receive the greatest benefits imaginable from the civilizing and settling influences which such a railroad would exert. There is plenty of time for this great scheme to be consummated. We have gotten along famously for a good while without any such connection, and could prosper without it, but it is one of those great strides of civilization and commerce which will be taken in good time. The central depot of Fort Worth will not ring this year or next with the stentorian voice of the traincaller crying, "All shoard!—Passengers going South—Yucatao, Lima, Buenos Ayres and intermediate points gers going South — Yucatan, Lima, Buenos Ayres and intermediate points —will take the train on the eleventh track," but the Fort Worth & Rio Grande will be one important step in bringing about a modified edition of that pleasant fancy.

The Republican fight settles down to The Republican fight settles down to Blaine and Arthur, and it looks a little as if each would hold a sufficient following to thwrit the other. The man from Maine is surely ahead of any previous record, and will make a brilliant fight. Perhaps the delegates will not do as is often done by a plucky and persistent solicitor, give it to him to get rid of him, but nobody can charge Mr. Blaine with not knowing what he wants or not working for it with commendable zeal and persistence. It is thought by some that if defeated this time he surely never will make another attempt, but he wants the presidency too bad to ever give it up resignedly. In case he does not succeed this year the chances are ten to one in favor of a dark horse about the complexion of Allison of Iowa. In this event of course there will be an Eastern man for second place. Bob Lincoln is not likely to be heard from in the convention.

CHICAGO LETTER.

Special Correspondence of the Gazette, CHICAGO, May 14—The May festival tickets are selling as fast as the managers could wish. It will be a great musical event for Chicago. By the way, we may in time rival Chicimant

As Mr. Arnold says, we are "too

Verily, there is "no excellence without

The exposition at New Orleans in December will be a big thing for the whole South and Southwest. Such displays nearly always pay handsomely in the main. The mineral display of North Carolina at the Roston

The question is raised that nature has so constituted woman that during most of the active part of her life it is often impossible and more indelicate for her to deposit her ballot in the box. This is very true, and no one wishes to gainsay it. But if good ballots are never prevented from being deposited save for that reason there need never be any fear of immoral and corrupt officials being placed in charge of the government. More honest but selfish men stay away from the polis purely on account of business or other selfish reasons than women who would be unable to deposit their ballots on account of the more sacred cares and offices of the home. Women are getting their freedom fast enough. The best friends of the great reform are satisfied with the steady, sure progress it is making. the steady, sure progress it is making. The report of the senate committee this year was favorable, but it is not even hoped by the most sanguine that con-gress will reach the matter this year. The cause is progressing quite as fast as the people are ready for it. In the New York legislature a short time ogo a bill granting women equal rights with men came within less than half a dozen vote of passing, and, by the way, because the women of New York held no mass meeting, burned no tar barrels, indulged in no forceh-light probarrels, indulged in no torch-light pro-cessions and sent no agents to Albany to lobby in favor of the measure, the to lobby in favor of the measure, the New York Sun assumed that the women did not want to be on a level with men. It ventured the opinion that half of the women of the empire state did not know that such a measure was being considered. It might have been less invidious and with truth said that half of the people did not know of it. But there is no wonder, when the metropolitan journals seldom, if ever, mention the great reform, except in caricature or malicious misrepresentation.
